Level: Collection

Dates: 1973 – 2011

Description: The collection consists of the publications and working papers of the Anglo-German Foundation (Deutsch-Britische Stiftung), for details of which see below. The largest part are the over 500 publications that were produced from research funded by the Foundation. Administrative documents from some of those projects also exist, particularly for those carried out between 2000 and 2009. The series of papers for committee and board meetings is comprehensive while correspondence files are incomplete but still provide a good idea of the workings and bilateral relationships of the Foundation. In addition to research publications, the collection also includes material published about the Foundation itself, such as annual reports and leaflets, and programmes of the Königswinter Conference which was partly funded by the Foundation. Finally there are folders of press cuttings, photographs and other memorabilia.

Access Status: Open

Extent: 41 boxes and 550 publications

History of the Anglo-German Foundation

The Anglo-German Foundation for the Study of Industrial Society, known in German as die Deutsch-Britische Stiftung für das Studium der Industriegesellschaft, was founded in 1973 by an agreement between the British and German governments on the initiative of the German President at the time, Gustav Heinemann. A first proposal for such a body (provisionally entitled the 'German-British Trust for Industrial Problems') was made in July 1972 by the Auswärtiges Amt [the German Foreign Office]. The first preparatory meeting took place on 6 October 1972 and on October 27 President Heinemann announced the intention to set up the Anglo-German Foundation for the Study of Industrial Society during a state visit to London. The Inter-Governmental Agreement was signed by Willy Brandt and Edward Heath on 2 March 1973, with the Royal Charter of the Foundation signed and sealed on 5 December of the same year, providing its incorporation. The Foundation was also a registered charity in the UK.

It was funded by assets derived from an original five-year endowment made by the German government and by grants subsequently provided by the German and British governments. On the German side, the Foreign Office was responsible for funding, while on the British side the Department of Industry (later Department of Trade & Industry) fulfilled this role until 1989, when the Foreign Office took over. The Foundation's management and use of resources were independent of government, however.

The Foundation was governed by a Board of Trustees of twelve members, six of whom were appointed by the Chancellor of Germany and six by the Prime Minister of the UK. The Trustees included respected individuals from politics, business, trade unions and academia. The Board elected a Chairman (automatically the Chairman of the Executive Committee) and Deputy Chairman (one of whom would be from the UK and the other from Germany) and two additional members of the Executive Committee, again one from each country.

When the Anglo-German Foundation was created – in the same year as Britain joined the European Economic Community – its objectives were twofold. They were set out in the Royal Charter as follows:

(a) to promote the study and to deepen understanding of modern industrial society with a view to advancing the knowledge of the citizens of Our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Federal Republic of Germany in regard to that industrial society and in the problems which arise thereout or in relation thereto, and in ways and means of resolving, circumventing, counteracting, alleviating or reducing such problems; and

(b) to advance and foster education and knowledge in the two States in the fields of science, technology, commerce, economics, sociology and the arts with a view to promoting and stimulating development of industrial society in a manner most beneficial to the community.

The Foundation's mission was to fund collaborative and comparative research on economic, social and environmental issues and to organise and support events such as conferences, seminars and lectures to promote the exchange of information and ideas between Germany and Great Britain.

Because it was a relatively small foundation, emphasis was placed on the dissemination of research (with comments and analysis) so as to enhance the collective impact of individual studies. To this end, it sponsored a large number of publications. From 1986 to 2001, it also awarded a Journalism Prize for outstanding contributions to the two countries' mutual understanding.

Furthermore, the Anglo-German Foundation served as a platform for networking and a forum for discussion for academics, politicians, entrepreneurs, managers, employee and employer representatives and journalists in both countries. It also made significant financial contributions to the annual Königswinter Conference as well as Young Königswinter.

In 2004, the trustees of the Foundation agreed that the original objectives had been fulfilled, within the limits of the Foundations resources, and decided to devote the remaining assets to one large final research project entitled 'creating sustainable growth in europe' [sic]. With the completion of this project and the expiry of the Foundation's Royal Charter (which was renewed twice since its inception), the Anglo-German Foundation ceased operations on 4 December 2009.

The Foundation supported over 1000 project grants, 600 publications and 400 networking events during its 36 years of activity.
