

Languages of the Global:
Women and International Political Thought

German Historical Institute London, 16 July 2015

Conveners: Valeska Huber (GHIL), Tamson Pietsch (Brunel/Sydney), Katharina Rietzler (Sussex)

- 11.00-11.30            Welcome and Introduction
Valeska Huber, Tamson Pietsch and Katharina Rietzler
- 11.30-12.15           Discussion of Reading
Linda K Kerber, ““Why should Girls be Learn’d and Wise?””: The Unfinished Work of Alice Mary Baldwin’, in, eadem, Toward an Intellectual History of Women (1997), pp. 224-258.
- 12.15-13.15           Session 1: Approaches
Key Questions: What approaches have you used? What would intellectual history mean in your research context?
- 13.15-14.00           Lunch
- 14.00-15.00           Session 2: Women Thinkers
Key Questions: Who are the women thinkers of the international? When do they emerge? Where do we find them?
- 15.00-15.15           Coffee
- 15.15-16.15           Session 3: Languages of the Global
Key Questions: What approaches did the women use? What did they read, who influenced them? What languages were at their disposal?
- 16.15-17.00           Concluding Discussion
- 19.00                    Dinner, location tbc

Participants:

Natalia Cecire (Sussex)
Valeska Huber (GHIL)
Helen McCarthy (Queen Mary)
Christine von Oertzen (Max Planck Institute for the History of Science, Berlin)
Patricia Owen (Sussex)
Francesca Piana (Birkbeck)
Tamson Pietsch (Brunel/Sydney)
Jessica Reinisch (Birkbeck)
Katharina Rietzler (Sussex)
Simon Rofe (SOAS)

The workshop is organized in co-operation with Birkbeck and SOAS and co-funded by the CHASE Consortium of the Humanities and the Arts in South East England.