KLAUS WEINHAUER (Bielefeld)

will speak on

The Return of the 'Many-Headed Hydra'? Protest, Social Movements, and Violence in the Phase of Global Upheaval (c.1916–23)

at the German Historical Institute, Seminar Room on Thursday, 10 December 2015, at 5.30 p.m.

The years between 1916 and 1923 saw multiple and overlapping upheavals around the globe. Labour historians have studied the strikes and social movements while other historians have discussed the revolutionary, social, and consumer protests of this phase. However, we still lack globally orientated integrative studies of these important years. Starting from a social and cultural historical translocal perspective, the lecture will suggest a space-sensitive re-interpretation of this phase, focused on the struggle about local order in a phase of global change.

Klaus Weinbauer is Professor of Modern History at Bielefeld University. He recently co-edited Germany 1916–23: A Revolution in Context (2015), and a special journal issue on terrorism, gender, and history (2014). Currently he is working on two books. One is about urban violence in the USA and Latin America during the twentieth century, and the other analyses the phase of global upheaval between c.1916 and 1923.
